'Your Mission."

" RY REY, D. D. BUCK, D. D.

If you cannot plant your cottage 'Mid perennial fruits and flowers;

Spending life's short summer season Gladsomely among the bowers;

You may toil among the faithful As they till Immanuel's land;

You may live for daily duties, With a willing heart and hand,

If no title grace your name;
If you cannot boast of beauty,
And have neither wealth or fame;
You may still be kindly-hearted,

Acting well your humble part;

If your path lead through affliction,

And you draw a sighing breath; If you cannot keep your loved ones

From the greedy grasp of Death; You may smile amid your weeping,

As you put your trust in God;

And, by leaning on the Saviour, You may learn to kiss the rod.

If you cannot mount the heavens

Where no cloud its shadow flines

Ranging through the realms of sunlight With the eagle's tireless wings; You may be a Singing Pilgrim,

With your cross from day to day; And behold your Master's footsteps All along your lowly way.

If you cannot move the mountains,

Or the ocean's depths explore;

As they range around the shore;

You may understand Your Mission

What you have to do or bear;

You may work for man's salvation As you for your heaven prepare.

Hasten, then, be up and doing;

Jesus numbers every tear.

Time is flying, death is near; Never mind the toil and suffring-

See! the pearly gates are opening

Hark! what music fills the air;

Loved ones ready are to greet you, Beck'ning you their bliss to share

Little Brown Hands.

From our Young Folks.

They drive home the cows from the pasture,

Where the quail whistles loud in the wheat field

Up through the long shady lane,

That are yellow with ripening grain.

They gather the earliest snowdrops

They find, in the thick waving grasses,

And the first crimson buds of the rose.

Where the scarlet-lipped strawberry grows,

If you cannot chain the billows

And though men may never praise you, They will prize your noble heart.

If your station here be lowly;
